KNOX SHOWS THE LIMITS OF OUR FEDERAL POWER.

Junior Pennsylvania Senator Defines Line Between State and Nation in the Enactment of Laws.

PRODUCTION IS NOT COMMERCE

And Power to Regulate Interstate Commerce Does Not Extend to Laying an Arbitrary Embargo on Lawfully Produced Products of State Address at Yale Commencement.

Senator Knox was the orator of the day at the law school exercises at Yale College yesterday and delivered an address on The Development of the Federal Power to Regulate Commerce. In it he developed what sounds like a keynote to his Presidential ambitions. He said:

There are no questions before the American people today of greater importance than those relating to the Federal control over commerce.

That power was granted chiefly as a safeguard against commercial hostility and reprisals between the States. It remained practically dormant until comparatively recent years. It is now clearly recognized as a great affirmative and constructive power not limited to composing differences between State laws and systems, but constitution is capable of the widest and fruitful development in a region all its own. In some respects it may be said to be the greatest power lodged in the general government, and the possibilities of its application are as extensive with the possibilities of the expansion of the vast subject to which it applies.

Nothing therefore is more consequent in our governmental affairs than an accurate understanding of the scope of the National and State powers in respect to commerce and the following [illegible] of possible interference or certainty if the power of the one shall be usurped or obstructed by the other. This will be understood and conceded except by those who expect to think the Federal Government can do anything, accomplish every thing, this seems good for the people, in the certain by enlisting exclusions upon that which cannot possibly be fulfilled.

There exists today a tendency to extend the exercise of power to the more remote ministering agencies of the direct or strictly commercial character, and the dominion of business engaged in interstate commerce. That tendency has led to well known abuses which affect adversely the commerce and the business necessity for the exercise of a firm and reasonable regulation and control.

The necessity for the exercise of Federal regulation almost always springs from abuses the States could not prevent.

The national power of regulation should only be invoked when a necessity for regulation exists. Normally, in honestly conducted commerce requires but little, if any, governmental regulation, and the fullest by Congress to regulate interstate commerce is quite different from legislative affairs on that it shall be free. Also, and conditions in commercial interests resulting in monopolies, restraint of trade, rebates, etc., may be dealt with by the normal operations of nature and create the demand for federal regulation to restore the full force of healthy competition.

The power of the [illegible] exists and has [illegible] years of [illegible] but it [illegible] in this country exhibit [illegible] some few years ago [illegible] necessity for [illegible] to test the efficiency of existing laws to meet the situation and therefore [illegible] such additional one as should yet be necessary to secure and [illegible] equality in interstate commerce.

The recent legislation [illegible] conditions which [illegible] to suppress the evils of rebates, discriminations, monopolies, restraint of trade, etc.,

LOCALS HAVE A KICK.

Connellsville Baseball Magnates Protest Against Schedule Arranged.

THE GAMES WITH CUMBERLAND

Are Both Wanted in Connellsville, Since Cumberland Had Two Games on Decoration Day—Deal With Butler Falls Through.

Local fans justly resent the interference of President C. B. Power of the West Penn in preventing a deal for several Butler players, negotiations for which were well under way by Owner Nick Gazetos of Butler and the Connellsville Baseball Association. For some reason Fayette county is not getting the best treatment that could be expected from minor league Presidents. Uniontown has troubles with R. R. Guy of the P. O. M., while Power is certainly giving the local people the worst of it.

Gazetos made the deal with a view of protecting himself. He had lost money since taking over the team, as Butler people have failed to come forward with their support. When Gazetos bought the franchise he learned that former President Alex. J. Lawson had issued 500 of the 20 game tickets, most of which had not been used up. Gazetos revoked the tickets, which made the Butler sports angry and they refused to patronize the game. Finding he was getting the worst of it, and not expecting to get anything out of the deal by the team being taken over by a stock company, Gazetos looked favorably upon the Connellsville offer for five of his players.

It was to President Power's advantage to keep Butler in line, but those who know the town say it will never be a paying proposition. The players are anxious and willing to come to Connellsville. President Power's authority to revoke the deal is seriously questioned and it is not to be thought that the Connellsville magnates will sit idly by and see a bona fide deal knocked in the head. If necessary an appeal will be made to the National Commission.

Connellsville is practically the only team in the league that has not been materially strengthened since the season opened. As a consequence the team is nearer the bottom than the top. The town has the worst of it in the matter of schedules, the latest abortion along this line being something that practically precludes the possibility of meeting expenses. President Tom Haymond of Fairmont made the first schedule, which was bad enough. President Power then empowered him to draw up another, in which there is no improvement. Certain it is that Fairmont is not being neglected, for its present long lead is principally due to the fact that it has stacked up against the weakest teams here lately.

Again, the West Penn President is trying to give Connellsville the worst of it in the matter of Fourth of July dates. The preposterous proposition is made that Connellsville play in Cumberland on the morning of that day and at home in the afternoon. Mr. Power insisted that a train arrives from Cumberland at 3.15 in the afternoon, but if he will take the time to look up the new schedule he will find that this time has been changed to 4.25. Connellsville gave Cumberland both games on Decoration Day. It wants both games here on the Fourth of July. This is no more than fair. Unless President Power shows a desire to do the right thing by the local magnates he will have another town to look up. The Connellsville people can make more money playing independent ball than they can with such bone-head schedule work and executive officiating.

The five Butler players included in the deal proposed to Owner Gazetos were Bill Harkins, Lundeborn, Narle, Frankenberry and Jacobson. Harkins is the star twirler of the West Penn League, having won 10 of his 11 games.

Rheumatism Cannot be Cured Unless Uric-O Is Used.

Sudden Deaths, Heart Failure and Paralysis Are Caused by Poisonous Uric and Rheumatic Acids.

The Rheumatic person is skeptical regarding the claims of almost any remedy advertised as a cure for Rheumatism and one can scarcely blame him for being so. All the plasters and liniments combined never actually cured a case of Rheumatism. They may relieve it in one quarter, but it is sure to break out somewhere else. The only true way to cure Rheumatism is to drive it from the system, for as long as the Uric and Rheumatic Acid remains in the blood, one is never entirely free from the trouble. This is where the value of Uric-O as a permanent cure for Rheumatism comes in. It seeks out the Rheumatic poison in the blood, muscles and kidneys, renders it inert and harmless and drives it out of the system. That is why Uric-O is such an admirable and effective cure for Rheumatism.

The chief reason that Uric-O is such a wonderful cure for Rheumatism is that it is designed and prepared to cure Rheumatism and Rheumatism only. It is composed of perfect antidotes for the rheumatic acid poison in the system. That is the secret of its wonderful success. Rheumatism simply cannot exist in a person's system if Uric-O is used.

Uric-O is sold by druggists at $1.00 per bottle, but if you still feel skeptical about its efficacy you can test it free of charge by cutting out this advertisement and sending same, together with your name and address, also the name of your druggist, to The Smith Drug Company, Syracuse, N. Y., and they will send you a sample bottle free. To people who write and say they have never used Uric-O, and want to test it thoroughly and will agree to take it systematically according to directions, they frequently give a regular $1.00 bottle free.

Uric-O is sold and recommended in Connellsville by F. E. Markell.

SOMERSET NEWS.

Happenings of a Day Among the Frosty Sons of Thunder.

SOMERSET, June 24.—Sunday afternoon a party of men strolling through the woods near Garrett discovered the body of a man, apparently about 35 years old, about five feet 10 inches in height and weighing in the neighborhood of 175 pounds. The body was attired in clothing of good quality but the hat and coat were missing. The body was lying about 100 feet from the tracks of the B. & O. railroad and presented the appearance of having been dragged there, the clothing, hair, etc., being rumpled. No marks were found on the body by means of which the cause of death could be determined. In the opinion of several parties the discovery of the body took place nearly a week after death and the condition of the body confirmed this statement. Numerous articles were found in the pockets of deceased, among which was a letter from his sister, Carrie, at Beaver Falls. No name was signed to this letter other than Carrie, and the part of the envelope bearing the last name of the man was torn away. The letters F. E. M. were the only handwriting on the outside of the envelope, this seeming to indicate that the last name of the man commenced with the letter M. An inquest was held before Squire A. J. McKenzie at Garrett, but no decision as to the method by which the unknown man met his death was reached. The County Poor Board took charge of the remains. The letter found on the remains was written upon stationery of the State Senate. This morning nothing definite as to the man's identity had been learned. The police of Beaver Falls have been notified.

It is rumored here that the powers that be in the West Penn League are seriously considering the advisibility of substituting Somerset in that league in place of Butler. A number of well known business men here, so the report states, have agreed to supply the money necessary for the organization and maintenance of a team. Everyone here has been grouchy ever since the ball season opened because there was no team here. For several years an independent team of excellent quality has been maintained here and the Somerset team has on occasions defeated teams from the Tri-State and P. O. M. Leagues. Good baseball seems to be the staff of life here in summer time and this proposition of a place in one of the minor leagues will doubtless be hailed with delight.

Judge Francis J. Kooser is convalescing from an attack of lumbago, which he has been suffering from for a week past.

Fred C. McFarland has returned from Sharon, where he has been visiting relatives and friends for some time.

The Colts, a junior organization, have been playing ball. Recently they defeated Rockwood 4 to 3, and Meyersdale went down at their hands, the score being 8 to 3. The Somerset Coal Company team met a strong organization from Wilson Creek and defeated them 9 to 4.

Fred McFarland has accepted a position in the Farmers National Bank.

Hay, Rockwood; Intermediate, Miss Mary Elizabeth Doll, New Centreville; Second Primary, Miss Pearle Sandles, Rockwood; First Primary, Miss Helen Schaff, Rockwood. This will undoubtedly make an excellent corps of teachers. Carefully Built Shoes.

A shoe should be built as carefully as an ocean steamer, for good service depends on the quality of material and workmanship. The Men's shoes we are selling this summer have soles cut from the finest "Oak Oak." The insoles, too, are one solid piece of oak sole leather, while between the two is a layer of ground cork and rubber cement. This construction insures two things, the greatest possible durability and as close an approach to waterproof as leather shoes can be made. All the newest and most popular styles in all the latest leathers.

THE YALE SPEECH OF SENATOR KNOX

Senator Knox's speech at Yale did not sound a new key note. But it clearly sounded a key note sounded in Washington as did the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation at which the Senator was pleasantly surprised by the information that his fellow Congressmen thought him an excellent President pro tempore.

In his response to the flattering kindness Senator Knox then so gracefully warned them to cling fast to the Great Chart of the Country Fathers amid all the legislative storms that sweep over Congressional seas. He observed a disposition to disregard the Constitution and to set the powers of Federal Government above the Rights of States in the attainment of worthy ends.

The danger of the disposition lies in the fact that once the Constitution is discredited for even so good purpose it is in danger of being defied for an evil purpose. The safety of the nation lies in the integrity of the lex suprema, the maintenance inviolate of the Constitution, until it may be amended in the manner prescribed. The greatest contract ever written, the articles of association between the stockholders of the biggest corporation on earth, signed by our forefathers and guaranteed by their lives, their fortunes and their honor, should be ever held sacred. Duty and success both demand it.

Senator Knox's exposition of the law and the evils sought to be remedied by legislation shows a profound study and a thorough knowledge of the great question of the times. It is only one of the illustrations of his great ability as a statesman and his unyielding patriotism as a man. There is nothing of the demagogue in Senator Knox. He is sane and safe, sound on the Constitution and sensible in all his conclusions.

That's why politicians and people all over the country are looking upon his candidacy seriously, even if he is from Pennsylvania.

It is safe to say that Senator Knox made an impression in New England.

GREENSBURG, June 25.—It was hot Monday and, in keeping with the weather, there was a warm meeting of the Republican County Committee. Harmony prevailed at all stages. County Chairman Charles C. Crowell was unanimously re-elected County Chairman. A committee, headed by James S. Beacom, had been appointed to revise the party rules to conform with the new Uniform Primaries Act, and to remedy deficiencies in the old rules. All except the first rule reported were unanimously adopted. This rule provided for the reduction of the number of Central Committeemen to one from each of the 171 districts. As it was formerly there was one for every 100 votes and one for every additional hundred or fraction thereof. This makes a membership of 500 in the central body. After a long discussion and much argument the old rule was adopted by a big majority. Stirring resolutions were passed by the convention after being recommended by a committee of which Hon. C. E. Whitten of Greensburg was Chairman. Roosevelt, Knox, Stuart, Huff, Woods and the Assembly were commended for their sterling worth and good work. The meeting adjourned amid much enthusiasm.

The good old swimming hole claimed its first victim yesterday. Robenstein Foster, a nine year old boy from Parnassus, was drowned while bathing in Puckety creek, near there. Three companions were with him, and the body was taken out in a short time. Dr. E. E. McConnell worked for an hour and a half in an effort to revive the victim, but without result. Coroner Wynn will go today and investigate the case, although it is almost certainly known to be accidental.

Captain John Borland of Troop A, State Police, issued a long statement last night, in which he justifies the action of his men in suppressing a riot here Saturday night. His men deny that they rode on sidewalks except where it was necessary to force back the threatening crowd. Borland states that the Greensburg police are jealous of his men, and that unless their attitude changes he will let this borough severely alone in the future. He is willing he says, to cooperate with all borough officials in the detection of crime and the maintenance of good order, but will not do so if the officers use "knocking" methods against his men, as was the case Saturday night.

South Greensburg comes to the front with the first snake story from this vicinity. Peter Anderson killed a five foot reptile yesterday afternoon. It was lying in front of his doorstep, enjoying a glittering sunbath when he disturbed the siesta with a club. The snake was brought here for exhibition purposes.

Shallenberger, President; C. H. Arison, Burt Newmyer, J. B. Henderson and Drs. G. B. Roberts and J. H. Hazlett. Two men aspired for the principalship, Prof. W. H. Prof. Yoder was elected on the first ballot, he having the support of Directors Roberts, Hazlett, Shallenberger and Henderson, while Directors Newmyer and Arison supported Prof. Johns. The citizens in general were satisfied to see Prof. Johns reelected, as he conducted the schools in a very acceptable manner last fall when one considers the condition things were in when he took charge. Some of the directors had given Johns to understand that he could depend on them for their support in the race and this led him to apply again.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY G. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

Eudoxia, who came originally from County Cork, was an Irish lady with a thick brogue and a husky temper. She was amiable enough so long as things went to her satisfaction, but when they did not suit her she was a termagant. She was neither beautiful nor graceful; she was not young nor was she very clean. Her usual condition was disheveled, her face was all askew, and when she dressed up she looked like a valentine. Her greatest weakness was a propensity for smashing dishes, and when reprimanded she would threaten to take her traps and skidoo. This news of the arrival of a daughter failed to fill her with enthusiasm. Firstly, it meant more work; secondly, she had not bargained for it. When she took the place it was on the understanding that the family consisted only of an elderly gentleman and his wife, that there was practically no work, good wages, plenty to eat, with the privilege of an evening out when she pleased. Instead of this millennium she soon found Stott stalled as a permanent guest, and now a daughter was to be foisted on her. No wonder hardworking girls were getting sick and tired of housework!

That evening Stott and the judge came home earlier than usual, and from their dejected appearance Mrs. Rossmore divined bad news. The judge was painfully silent throughout the meal, and Stott was unusually grave. Finally the latter took her aside and broke it to her gently. In spite of their efforts and the efforts of their friends the congressional inquiry had resulted in a finding against the judge, and a demand had already been made upon the senate for his impeachment. They could do nothing now but fight it in the senate with all the influence they could muster. It was going to be hard, but Stott was confident that right would prevail. After dinner as they were sitting in silence on the porch, each measuring the force of this blow which they had expected, yet had always hoped to ward off, the crunching sound of a bicycle was heard on the quiet country road. The rider stopped at their gate and came up the porch, holding out an envelope to the judge, who, guessing the contents, had started forward. He tore it open. It was a cablegram from Paris and read as follows:

Am sailing on the Kaiser Wilhelm today. SHIRLEY.

CHAPTER VII.

THERE was greater activity in the Rossmore cottage at Massapequa than there had been any day since the judge and his wife went to live there. Since daybreak Eudoxia had been scouring and polishing in honor of the expected arrival, and a hundred times Mrs. Rossmore had climbed the stairs to see that everything was as it should be in the room which had been prepared for Shirley. It was not, however, without a passage at arms that Eudoxia consented to consider the idea of an addition to the family. Mrs. Rossmore had said to her the day before:

"My daughter will be here tomorrow, Eudoxia."

A look expressive of both displeasure and astonishment marred the classic features of the hireling. Putting her broom aside and placing her arms akimbo, she exclaimed in an injured tone:

"And it's a daypther you've got now? So it's three in family you are! When I took the place, it's two you tould me there was!"

"Well, with your kind permission," replied Mrs. Rossmore, "there will be three in future. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States that says we can't have a daughter without consulting our help, is there?"

The sarcasm of this reply did not escape even the dull edged wits of the drudge. She relapsed into a dignified silence and a few minutes later was discovered working with some show of enthusiasm.

The judge was nervous and fidgety. He made a pretense to read, but it was plain to see that his mind was not on his book. He kept leaving his chair to go and look at the clock; then he would lay the volume aside and wander from room to room like a lost soul. His thoughts were on the dock at Hoboken.

By noon every little detail had been attended to, and there was nothing further to do but sit and wait for the arrival of Stott and Shirley. They were to be expected any moment now. The passengers had probably got off the steamer by 11 o'clock. It would take at least two hours to get through the customs and out to Massapequa. The judge and his wife sat on the porch counting the minutes and straining their ears to catch the first sound of the train from New York.

"I hope Stott broke the news to her gently," said the judge.

"I wish we had gone to meet her ourselves," sighed his wife.

The judge was silent, and for a moment or two he puffed vigorously at his pipe, as was his habit when disturbed mentally. Then he said:

"I ought to have gone, Martha, but I was afraid. I'm afraid to look my own daughter in the face and tell her that I am a disgraced man, that I am to be tried by the senate for corruption, perhaps impeached and turned off the bench as if I were a criminal. Shirley won't believe it; sometimes I can't believe it myself. I often wake up in the night and think of it as part of a dream, but when morning comes it's still true—it's still true!"

He smoked on in silence. Then happening to look up he noticed that his wife was weeping. He laid his hand gently on hers.

"Father, father, what have they done to you?"

"Don't cry, dear; don't make it harder for me to bear. Shirley must see no trace of tears."

"I was thinking of the injustice of it all," replied Mrs. Rossmore, wiping her eyes.

"Fancy Shirley in this place, living from hand to mouth," went on the judge.

"That's the least," answered his wife. "She's a fine, handsome girl, well educated and all the rest of it. She ought to make a good marriage." No matter what state of mind Mrs. Rossmore might be in, she never lost sight of the practical side of things.

"Hardly with her father's disgrace hanging over her head," replied the judge wearily. "Who" he added, "would have the courage to marry a girl whose father was publicly disgraced?"

Both relapsed into another long silence, each mentally reviewing the past and speculating on the future. Suddenly Mrs. Rossmore started. Surely she could not be mistaken! No, the clanging of a locomotive bell was plainly audible. The train was in. From the direction of the station came people with parcels and hand bags and presently there was heard the welcome sound of carriage wheels crunching over the stones. A moment later they saw coming round the bend in the road a cab piled up with small baggage.

"Here they are! Here they are!" cried Mrs. Rossmore. "Come, Eudoxia!" she called to the servant, while she herself hurried down to the gate. The judge, fully as agitated as herself, only showing this emotion in a different way, remained on the porch, pale and anxious.

The cab stopped at the curb, and Stott alighted, first helping out Mrs. Blake. Mrs. Rossmore's astonishment on seeing her sister was almost comical.

"Milly!" she exclaimed.

They embraced first and explained afterward. Then Shirley got out and was in her mother's arms.

"Where's father?" was Shirley's first question.

"There—he's coming!"

The judge, unable to restrain his impatience longer, ran down from the porch toward the gate. Shirley, with a cry of mingled pain and joy, precipitated herself at his breast.

"Father, father," she cried between her sobs, "what have they done to you?"

"There, there, my child! Everything will be well—everything will be well!"

Her head lay on his shoulder, and he stroked her hair with his hand, unable to speak from pent emotion.

Mrs. Rossmore could not recover from her stupefaction on seeing her sister. Mrs. Blake explained that she had come chiefly for the benefit of the voyage and announced her intention of returning on the same steamer.

"So, you see, I shall bother you only a few days," she said.

"You'll stay just as long as you wish," replied Mrs. Rossmore. "Happily we have just one bedroom left." Then, turning to Eudoxia, who was wrestling with the baggage, which formed a substitute Macadam on the sidewalk, she gave instructions:

"Eudoxia, you'll take Miss Lily's baggage to the small bedroom adjoining Miss Shirley's. She is going to stop with us for a few days."

Taken completely aback at the news of this new addition, Eudoxia rebelled at first demurely. She seemed on the point of handing in her resignation there and then. But evidently she thought better of it, for, taking a cue from Mrs. Rossmore, she addressed in the sarcastic manner of her mistress:

"Four in family, ma'am? I suppose the constitution of the United States allows a family to be as big as one likes to make it. It's hard on us girls, but if it's the law, it's all right, ma'am. The more the merrier!" With which broadside she hung the bag all over herself and staggered off to the house.

Stott explained that the larger pieces and the trunks would come later by express. Mrs. Rossmore took him aside while Mrs. Blake joined Shirley and the judge.

"Did you tell Shirley?" asked Mrs. Rossmore. "How did she take it?"

"She knows everything," answered Stott, "and takes it very sensibly. We shall find her of great moral assistance in our coming fight in the senate," he added confidently.

Realizing that the judge would like to be left alone with Shirley, Mrs. Rossmore invited Mrs. Blake to go upstairs and see the room she would have, while Stott said he would be glad of a wash-up. When they had gone Shirley sidled up to her father in her old familiar way.

"I've just been longing to see you, father," she said. She turned to get a good look at him, and, noticing the lines of care which had deepened during her absence, she cried, "Why, how you've changed! I can scarcely believe it's you. Say something. Let me hear the sound of your voice, father."

The judge tried to smile.

"Why, my dear girl, I"—

Shirley threw her arms round his neck.

"Ah, yes, now I know it's you," she cried.

"Of course it is, Shirley, my dear girl. Of course it is. Who else would it be?"

"Yes, but it isn't the same," insisted Shirley. "There is no ring to your voice. It sounds hollow and empty, like an echo. And this place," she added dolefully, "this awful place!"—

She glanced around at the cracked ceilings, the cheaply papered walls, the shabby furniture, and her heart sank as she realized the extent of their misfortune. She had come here prepared for the worst, to help win the fight for her father's honor, but to have to struggle against sordid poverty as well, to endure that humiliation in addition to disgrace—ah, that was something she had not anticipated! She changed color and her voice faltered. Her father had been closely watching for just such signs, and he read her thoughts.

"It's the best we can afford, Shirley," he said quietly. "The blow has been complete. I will tell you everything. You shall judge for yourself. My enemies have done for me at last."

"Your enemies?" cried Shirley eagerly. "Tell me who they are so I may go to them."

"Yes, dear, you shall know everything, but not now. You are tired after your journey. Tomorrow sometime Stott and I will explain everything."

THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE

Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.
